When you book travel through Chase Travel using points, your redemption is connected to the rules of the travel provider. This means:

- Refundable flight bookings may return points
- Refundable hotel reservations may return points
- Non-refundable bookings may not qualify for a points refund

- Some cancellations may result in travel credits instead of points

Before canceling any reservation, always check the cancellation terms shown during booking.

How Do Chase Travel Points Refunds Work?

When you cancel a Chase Travel booking, the refund process depends on how you paid.

There are usually three situations:

1. Booking Paid Completely With Chase Points

If you used only Chase Ultimate Rewards points and your booking qualifies for cancellation:

- Your points may be returned to your Ultimate Rewards account
- Refund timing depends on processing by Chase and the travel provider
- Any applicable cancellation penalties may affect the refund amount

For eligible cancellations, Chase may credit the redeemed points back into your account.

2. Booking Paid With Points + Cash

Many travelers use a combination of points and money.

For example:

- 50,000 Chase points
- $200 cash payment

If the booking is refundable:

- Points may return to your Chase account
- Cash may be refunded to your original payment method

The final outcome depends on the supplier's cancellation rules.

3. Booking Made With Transferred Chase Points

This is where many travelers become confused.

Chase allows eligible cardholders to transfer Ultimate Rewards points to airline and hotel partners. However, once points are transferred, they follow the partner program's rules.

For example:

- Chase → airline miles
- Chase → hotel loyalty points

After transfer, Chase usually cannot reverse the transaction. Refunds must be handled according to the airline or hotel loyalty program rules.

Why Did My Chase Travel Points Not Come Back After Cancellation?

A common question from Chase users is:

“I canceled my Chase Travel booking, but my points are missing. Why?”

There are several possible reasons.

1. Refund Processing Is Still Pending

Sometimes your cancellation is approved, but the points have not yet appeared.

The delay may happen because:

- Airline has not processed cancellation
 - Hotel has not confirmed refund
 - Chase is waiting for supplier confirmation
 - System updates are still processing

2. Your Booking Was Non-Refundable

Not every Chase Travel reservation qualifies for a refund.

Examples:

- Basic economy flights
- Non-refundable hotel rates

- Promotional travel deals
- Restricted fares

In these cases, you may receive:

- Travel credit
- Partial refund
- No refund

The exact result depends on the booking conditions.

3. Points Were Already Transferred to a Travel Partner

If you transferred Chase points to another loyalty program, the points are no longer controlled by Chase.

- World of Hyatt
- Singapore Airlines KrisFlyer

You must contact the airline or hotel loyalty program for refund options.
